SECTION - A : READING

Q.1 Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given below. (1×10=10)

Reading is one of the most valuable habits a person can develop. In an age when short videos and quick messages dominate our attention, reading requires patience and concentration. A good book does more than provide information; it allows readers to understand different people, cultures and ways of thinking.

Regular reading can improve vocabulary and communication skills. It also develops imagination because readers create pictures and situations in their minds. Students who read beyond their textbooks often find it easier to express their ideas in writing and speaking.

However, developing a reading habit does not mean that a person must read for several hours every day. Even fifteen or twenty minutes of focused reading can be useful. The important thing is consistency. A person can begin with a subject of interest and gradually explore different types of books.

Reading should therefore be treated not merely as an academic activity but as a lifelong habit. It can entertain, educate and inspire people at different stages of life.

Q.2 Read the following passage carefully and make notes on it. Also give a suitable title. (4 Marks)

Trees are essential for maintaining the balance of nature. They absorb carbon dioxide and release oxygen, provide shelter to animals and birds, and help prevent soil erosion. They also influence rainfall and reduce the harmful effects of excessive heat.

Rapid urbanisation and increasing construction have resulted in the loss of many trees. Roads, buildings and industries often replace green spaces. When forests and trees disappear, biodiversity is affected and the local environment becomes less healthy.

Planting trees is important, but protecting existing trees is equally necessary. Communities can create local parks, schools can organise plantation activities, and citizens can avoid unnecessary cutting of trees. Rainwater harvesting and proper care of young plants can further support green spaces.
